Patient Symptoms

Hey, head of the World Programme Administration, I have been in this problem for two years.

Doctor Assessment

With what I see, I think you have psoriasis, a condition that causes red, scaly patches on the skin, and possible causes include genetic predisposition, immune system dysfunction, and environmental factors. You can try applying moisturizers to soothe the skin, taking warm baths, and using over-the-counter creams or ointments to reduce inflammation, but you should consult a doctor if the condition persists or worsens, as prescription medications or light therapy may be necessary to manage symptoms. ----- Severity : ■ LOW

Recommendation : Monitor symptoms and seek care if they worsen.
