Doctor Assessment

Based on the symptoms you've described, including weakness, difficulty with finger dexterity, and trouble making necessary stitches with yarn, it's possible you may be experiencing a condition affecting the nerves or muscles in your hand or arm. This could be due to a variety of factors including injury, repetitive strain, or an underlying neurological condition. It's recommended that you schedule a thorough examination with a neurologist or an orthopedic specialist to determine the exact cause and appropriate treatment. In the meantime, taking regular breaks from activities that exacerbate the symptoms and considering physical therapy to improve hand strength and dexterity may be beneficial. ----- Severity : ■ LOW Recommendation : Monitor symptoms and seek care if they worsen.
